The rebranding of EXOS as a rebadged product is an interesting question. This is a reasonable issue to investigate with all our software licenses.

The payment we make is 5K USD a year, which is the yearly support fee. (we paid it a couple of weeks ago.). I will transfer it to you, for the next year.

We should also look at potential Royalties with the new rebranding for Aviat.

I assume Extreme has opted for the Royalty-Free option and paid the $115K? Is there a yearly support-fee that we pay? Meenakumar indicated that a payment was made about a month ago?

Hi Mini,

You and I have corresponded in the past. I am the account manager at SNMP Research that works with Extreme Networks.

We have a license agreement in place that dates back to 22 October, 2001 for our EMANATE source with EPIC product that has been used for the Extreme Networks Network Switch project. This license has a provision for royalties to be paid for every binary copy of the software that is created for your product.

Over the years a number of royalties were reported. Here is the information back to 2007:

Year      Royalties reported and paid

2007	130
2008	219
2009	51
2010	8
2011	11

For 20112, 2013, and 2014, royalties have been reported at zero quantity.

Has the Network Switch product been discontinued? Or have the royalty reports gone to zero because of personnel changes or lack of tracking?

If there is someone else at Extreme Networks that I should be contacting, please let me know.

Best regards,

Steve
